This course will introduce you to the business of public and media relations; maximizing positive coverage for an organization/individual/cause in the mass media, without paying for that coverage through advertising. Public and media relations also involve anticipating, and responding to, the public's interest in the organization/person/cause. The class also explores how public relations relate to other disciplines in the marketing and communications field, such as branding, marketing and advertising. You'll learn the contemporary nomenclature of the industry and how public relations influences other creative disciplines to solve complex communications problems for companies, nonprofits and other sectors.

Focusing on the United States, this course examines the relationship between law and politics both in general and with respect to specific substantive topics. Substantive topics will include civil liberties (freedom of religion, speech, press, the right to bear arms, the right to privacy), civil rights (equal protection, voting rights), and the rights of the criminally accused. Toward the end of the semester, we will examine in greater depth this last topic & the rights of the criminally accused & by delving into the nitty-gritty inner-workings of the New York lower court system. Through Yale Professor Issa Kohler-Hausmann's book Misdemeanorland, we will peer into the criminal justice experience of criminal defendants and the law and politics involved therein. Following an initial introductory period on legal reasoning, each class will include student presentations of legal arguments using a courtroom format.

This course is designed to aid student veterans with their transition from military life into an academic setting. Students will explore strategies, techniques and ways of thought aimed at improving their personal knowledge base of resources for veterans, organizational skills, and communication skills. These elements will not only aid students in their academic pursuits, but career aspirations as well. Additionally, students will examine elements of university culture, peer networking, and community engagement to improve academic success and build a local support network. This course is ideal for veteran and active military students looking to engage with the military affiliated community and utilize available resources in order to enhance academic performance

Focusing on the United States, this course examines the relationship between law and politics both in general and with respect to specific substantive topics. Substantive topics will include civil liberties (freedom of religion, speech, press, the right to bear arms, the right to privacy), civil rights (equal protection, voting rights), and the rights of the criminally accused. Toward the end of the semester, we will examine in greater depth this last topic & the rights of the criminally accused & by delving into the nitty-gritty inner-workings of the New York lower court system. Through Yale Professor Issa Kohler-Hausmann's book Misdemeanorland, we will peer into the criminal justice experience of criminal defendants and the law and politics involved therein. Following an initial introductory period on legal reasoning, each class will include student presentations of legal arguments using a courtroom format.
